Editorial

By Christopher Erickson
Managing Editor

There hasn’t been a whole lot of things happening since I last wrote an editorial. I did the season of Dickens Fair, went to the PEERS 12th Night Ball in their new location at the Elks Lodge in Alameda, attended FurCon and participated in the parade and traveled down to Los Angeles for Gallifrey One.

The big thing I have done is to read the “Twilight” saga of books. I undertook this as a personal experiment in suppressing expectations and as an analysis of the criticisms of the book that many in the fandom community have with it. I wanted be able to argue the points for or against the criticisms after actually have read the books. The upshot of this was that I found that the books aren’t well written, the characters feel underdeveloped and the plots are lengthy to the point of tedium while failing to balance a love story and supernatural action. I wrote a lengthy Facebook posting on my feelings as to why the novels are horrible. The summary is that the pacing is terrible, the repetitive descriptions and use of words is grating on the ears, the characters choices are weak, the sudden plot twists feel forced and the lessons that can be drawn from how the characters treat each other are destructive. Both Edward Cullen and Jacob Black are thoroughly disrespectful to Bella Swan, her choice of becoming a vampire to be with Edward promotes a message of having to change oneself to be accepted by people is misguided, and Bella’s self-loathing attitude does little to change the perception of what people should aspire to. I read the books on their own merits, but I believe that all of the criticisms with the book are valid. I will not disparage the people who like the books, since it is important to find things that people are interested in to get them to read and think critically. (My sister is dyslexic and only started to read outside of academic need through Harry Potter.) I will conclude that Stephanie Meyer is a horrible writer with characters that are insufferable, plodding stories and repetitive word choices.

I looked forward to the Beatles tribute to the 50th Anniversary of their appearance on “The Ed Sullivan Show.” The tribute was amazing with plenty of wonderful performances (my favorites were Paul McCartney and Ringo Starr as well as Stevie Wonder’s cover of “We Can Work It Out,” which was a version he previously recorded). I would have liked to see more of the original footage used or just a whole period where we could see their musical set. I will just have to look for it on YouTube. It was a wonderful show and it seemed like all of the people had a great time that were in the Ed Sullivan Theater.

I have been watching “Marvel’s Agents of SHIELD” and have been impressed by the change in scriptwriting. There finally has been more focus on the team members with individual stories for a couple of them and a nice subplot featuring one of the members as well as a main villain to fight against. Various plot elements have been consolidated into a more cohesive story as well. There are plans to include events from the upcoming “Captain America: The Winter Soldier” movie as well as a guest appearance by the Asgardian warrior Sif from the “Thor” movies.

I have also caught up with “Once Upon A Time in Wonderland.” The show has been a bit slow to develop and the plot elements seem to be created specifically for the show since there is only so much from the two stories and any other works by Lewis Carroll that could be put into a long-form storytelling format. The show has developed by providing a back-story for Jafar, The Red Queen/Anastasia, The Knave of Hearts/Will Scarlett and Alice. The different threads of the story have come together and they have managed to resolve the original character motivation (Alice to rescue her true love, the genie) and set up another interesting plotline.

I have mostly been watching WWF “Attitude Era” championship matches of Bret “The Hitman” Hart and “Stone Cold” Steve Austin and the Undertaker anthology. It seems like there has been more emphasis on long-form story telling with these old matches as they feel more natural than the recent storylines I have been hearing about in the WWE nowadays.

I attended Gallifrey One in February and got to make new friends and reconnect with old ones. I listened to an Eight Doctor audio adventure, “The Vengeance of Morbius” and some “Doctor Who” music from a 25th Anniversary disc that we picked up a while back as well as some mix compact discs that I made. Daft Punk’s “Get Lucky” was played a couple of times on the way down.

One of the developments announced at Gallifrey One was the crowdfunding for an Inspector Spacetime movie. I was excited by this prospect since Sylvester McCoy (The Doctor) and Robert Picardo (The Doctor from “Star Trek: Voyager”) will be featured in the movie as well as Chase Masterson (Dabo girl Lita on “Star Trek: Deep Space Nine”). The decision was made to move forward since a movie is easier to get financial backing than a webseries. There is also an Inspector Spacetime comic book series in the works at IDW Publishing since they lost their license to “Doctor Who.” The fundraiser for the movie is at www.indiegogo.com/projects/the-inspector-chronicles-untitled-motion-picture-about-a-space-traveler.

Jean and I also spent our Christmas vacation in Cambria at a nice hotel right on the beach and made a visit to Hearst Castle in San Simeon. I have wanted to see this place for a long time as it was the inspiration for Xanadu in “Citizen Kane” and the place did not disappoint. We also spent time at Mission San Miguel on the way back to the Bay Area (and past two other missions on the way back as well). We also took in the Rios-Caledonia Adobe directly across from the mission. It was neat seeing these structures and how they have survived and been preserved.

We have also reached our 150th issue here at Science Fiction/San Francisco. It has been a treat being able to write about my experiences at conventions, which gives me special appreciation for putting on an event, learning about the behind the scenes operations that go into running a successful function, promoting it and being able to share something you love with other people. I also get to support something that my wife has devoted her time and effort to by providing material and managing the calendar. It has also enabled me to attend events that I would never have thought of attending, such as WorldCon when it was in Reno and Maker Faire.

It has also let me connect with other people who share my interests in photography, costuming, cosplay and improv theatrics. I have meet many more people through writing and media events and gotten more involved in the community through promoting PEERS and BAERS events, helping advertise conventions, being a panelist at conventions (which I thought I would never be) and share interests while forging deeper relationships with people in the fandom community.

SF/SF has also let me provide commentary on issues that we all like to discuss and provide my thoughts on conventions/faires and what I experience at them. It has helped me learn to communicate with others as well as learn about some of the problems with the cosplay community (nerd privilege and the fake geek girl issue) and has made me more aware of how I treat people (both men and women) and how they would like to be treated.

It has also allowed me to connect to my wife in a way that provides an opportunity to share what we both love to do together and share it with others in a way that reaches a larger audience than the occasional LiveJournal posting or Facebook status update. Through SF/SF, we have attended shows that we might not have known about and made weekends around the outing. It has allowed us to bond over the things that we love individually and brought us closer together.

Join our crew!
We are always looking for writers to cover local events, conventions, fan groups and the fannish scene in general.

Jean Martin writes:

This issue marks our 150th, and I myself I’m astounded that we’ve produced this many issues already. SF/SF has been one of my major life priorities and source of creativity and community these past nine years and I’m hoping for more milestones to come. I am so grateful to Jack Avery who founded the zine in July 2005 and who has entrusted me with the running of it (along with Christopher J. Garcia for several years) from October 2005 onwards. It was exactly the right thing I needed when I was beginning a new life and looking for something fulfilling to do. The first LOC below is from Jack and I’m very glad to hear from him.

Another person I’m thankful for is Chris Garcia who also has a message for us below (with a great summary of the history of SF/SF so far). Chris and I ran SF/SF for about four years and his energy, colorful personality and knowledge of fandom really helped the zine and myself personally. Several people have come and gone and I miss all of them including España Sheriff, David Moyce and Eva Barrows. We’ve also had numerous contributors in the past who have really added their voice to SF/SF and I’m glad I was able to have the zine serve as an opportunity for people to showcase their talents in writing, photography and art.

But I’m so happy to have long-time contributors still in board such as Diane B. Rooney who has since become a friend as well. Diane’s LOC is below. And we don’t want to forget our regular LOC writers such as Lloyd Penney. While I publish SF/SF for the joy of it, it is comforting to know that we at least have one dedicated reader such as Lloyd who seems like a part of the staff already as he appears in pretty much every issue. And yes, Lloyd has a LOC for us below.

Lots of thanks to Tom Becker who has been doing a great job with our layout for several years now. There wouldn’t be an SF/SF without Tom! And, of course, Bill Burns who generously uploads all our issues to efanzines.com for free.

I’m also grateful to all the people who have actively helped us with our content by allowing us press access and/or have provided us with information. It is one of our missions to promote events in the Bay Area but we don’t want to take for granted the time and cooperation from other people that are oftentimes needed to accomplish this goal.

Lastly, my love and thanks to Christopher Erickson who has come on board not only as our most prolific contributor but also has now been helping with the running of SF/SF as my day job has become busier. He’s also taken on the very time-consuming calendar of events after España left. Also, Chris’s more in-depth perspective on events and general fandom issues is something that I believe adds greatly to the quality of the zine. It is also wonderful that he and I share something that we both love and can create together. Chris talks about our 150th issue eloquently in his editorial in this issue.

And now, here are the LOCs…
Jack Avery writes:

It’s hard to believe that it’s been 150 issues and nearly nine years of Science Fiction/San Francisco. I never would have dreamed when I put out that first issue all those years ago that it would have lasted this long or published this many editions.

I could not possibly express how pleased and impressed I am with the work you, and everyone else who has contributed over the years, have done with the zine. I knew when I started it that I was not the right editor for the project so I’m very happy that you’ve made it your own.

I had hoped that the zine would be both a resource and a meeting place for Bay Area fans and I think that in recent years it has become just that.

I still wish that more fans would discover (and contribute to) the zine, but I think that your personality, consistency and ability to promote SF/SF has taken it much further than I ever dreamed.

So thanks to you and Christopher Erickson and Chris Garcia and David Moyce and Lucy Huntzinger and Tom Becker and España Sheriff and Eva Kent and Diane B. Rooney and Al “Rackstraw” Megas and all of the other contributors and editors. I may have started this thing, but I certainly can’t take credit for its success.

Looking forward to the next 150 issues.

Jean Martin responds:

Jack, thanks so much for writing this. It means a lot to me that you, the one who started SF/SF, recognize our efforts and longevity. Yes, I do wish more people would contribute, but despite my ongoing efforts, it seems like people are just way too busy to do so. As Chris mentioned in his current editorial, most people are happy with just sharing their stories in short formats and immediately such as with social media. Also, not everyone wants to write, take photographs and create art. It takes a certain type of person to want to do these things and most of them have their own outlets for their creativity. However, I am still pleasantly surprised that we do keep getting enough material for each issue. I’m always worried going into each issue that we’ll have nothing and always turns out okay.

Chris Garcia writes:

Wow, 150 issues of SF/SF. I can distinctly remember reading the very first issue from the great Jack Avery put up on eFanzines. The second issue had the first words from me in it; I sent a letter of comment to Jack that started like this:

Good stuff. Good to have ya back with us in the world of grumpy publishing. You should have held out, because every time I read a new Vegas Fandom Weekly, I got a step closer to doing a BArea Fandom Weekly myself. You’ve saved me the trouble.

Now, all these years later, having spent a little more than 90 issues either writing articles or as an editor, it’s great to see how the thing has evolved in every area. I really think that what y’all’ve been doing in the last couple of years has been fantastic and I can’t wait to see what comes next!

But this is supposed to be about the last 149 issues, right?

And so, I’ll talk about my years with the zine. My first words were that LoC, and also in issue 2 was my piece called A Sorta Neo-Fan’s View of BArea Fandom. That was my first piece. I think I had something in every issue until number 8, and then Issue 9, Jean Martin and I came on-board as co-editors with Jack doing the layout. It was a heady time, those days. David Moyce followed as our copy editor not long after. Those were good days, late 2005 and 2006. We put out two issues a month, had a lot of great content, got some nice notice from folks, it was a wonderful time to be putting together the zine.

Issue 21 brought on Eva Kent doing wonderful layout, and Jack becoming officially Emeritus! That line-up was a lot of fun too, and I think we finally got all of us, every editor, in one place in 2007 at the Westercon! Issue 46 saw David move up to doing the layout (I did it once, and no I won’t tell you which one because I’m not one to admit my mistakes!) and that was the core for a while.

Issues 44 & 45 were rather special to me, as it had what I consider to be the best thing I ever wrote for SF/SF - Memories of BayCons Past. I really think that it captured what I loved about BayCon and I go back and look at those pieces anytime I find myself kvetching about staff meetings and so on.

Issue 65 found España Sheriff’s name on the masthead for the first time (I think her first appearance was around issue 10) and things were stabilized until issue 78, when Tom Becker came on as Compositor and gave the zine so much more color to the zine. Really, SF/SF has come fully to life with Tom coming on-board and I can not be prouder of what we managed to do.

Of course, David and I left after issue 100. I’ve always felt bad that I haven’t been able to send as much to SF/SF over the last few years as it will always have a place near and dear to my heart. When I think of those early days, 2005-2008, when you could count on great stuff from Jean, Dr. Noe, Diane Rooney, España, and even once in a while something readable from myself, I smile and know that I was a part of something special. An interesting illustration of that was an on-line argument a bunch of folks were engaging in that fell into the “Blogs Rules! Zines Rule!” strain of fight. I put up a link to SF/SF saying ‘point me to a blog that gives this kind of coverage to Bay Area fandom.’

No one could, because no one else did.

Or does.

Jean Martin responds:

Chris, thanks so much for the SF/SF history summary. It makes me nostalgic thinking about all of the people who’ve been a part of SF/SF and how we all had so much fun creating the zine and hanging out together. Things have evolved and are just as fun, but yes, I definitely miss those days.

I’m glad Jack came up with SF/SF because I’m really not an ideas person. I see things people start and then a lightbulb lights up in my brain and I go: “I want to do that!” Which was definitely the case with SF/SF. And I was a newbie in fandom in 2005 so while I was willing and excited to take SF/SF on, I was also a bit daunted. So having a fandom veteran like yourself there too was a big comfort.

And I’m glad that you still think about us and appreciate the work that we do. We’d love for you to contribute when you can. It is true that SF/SF offers something special and unique to Bay Area fandom, which just has so much going on! However, our geographic concentration and our not being like a traditional fanzine (I think we’re more of a news zine than anything else), does limit our audience. But I have heard from folks outside of our area as well as general fanzine readers that they enjoy SF/SF, so that is very validating.
Diane B. Rooney writes:

Congratulations on SF/SF’s 150th Issue!

SF/SF was started way back in July 2005 by Jack Avery. The first issue was six pages, and included a Fannish Calendar of two pages, an article about a screening of “Faster Pussycat! Kill! Kill!” at the Bridge Theater in San Francisco (which closed in January 2013), and some photos of a cool Burning Man wooden temple sculpture built out on Octavia Boulevard in SF that didn’t mention the artist’s name.

By Issue 6 in August 2005 (yes, a month later!), the ezine was up to 40 pages, the Fannish Calendar was 19 pages, and there were not one but two feature articles by Jean Martin, one on Firefly/Serenity and one on an SCA event, along with a cross-posted piece by Mike Wilson on Glory Days Water Wars battle between Klingons and Federation ships from Star Fleet Region Four. And, I wrote and supplied photos for my first article for SF/SF, about a “Lord of the Rings” trilogy screening held August 18 at the Presidio Theater, organized by Eileen Attridge, that raised over $2,200 for autism research.

Since then I’ve written on numerous topics, including Dickens Fair, Maker Faire, the Northern California Pirate Festival, Edwardian Ball, WonderCon, Harry Potter and numerous author events and book signings. And I continue to try to organize my life so there is time to write more.

SF/SF is, I think, a unique resource. With every issue I am reminded of the overwhelming breadth and depth of the SF Bay Area fannish scene and impressed by the enthusiasm of writers and readers and the quality of the news gathering, reporting, and opinion pieces that are delivered faithfully and enthusiastically month after month.

Lots of ezines (and other types of magazines as well, including many backed by large communications companies) never last anywhere near 150 issues, so Jean, Chris, Tom, our inspiration Chris Garcia, and all the usual suspects who contribute to Science Fiction/San Francisco should be really proud.

Jean Martin writes:

Hi Diane! I remember your story about the LOTR trilogy like it was yesterday. I thought to myself, “who is this fellow Tolkien enthusiast and how do I meet her?” I’m so glad that you still continue to write for SF/SF as your writing is wonderful and you also take great photos. I’m also glad that we’ve become friends.

Lloyd Penney writes:

Thank you for issue 149 of SF/SF … I got your message about comments about the first 149 issues for issue 150! But, first things first…

Jean Martin responds:

Hi Lloyd, thanks for writing to us!

That cover … hmmm … well, one thing I did think of is an old line from “Deep Space Nine,” that the spots do go all the way down…

Yeah, the cover is a bit tongue-in-cheek. It’s not one I would have picked myself but it was appropriate considering the issue was behind a week or so.

Hope you’re feeling better. We’ve been well, but keeping expenses to a minimum. We’ve been watching the complete “Babylon 5,” plus the various Farm series from the BBC. It’s good to be able to overcome the lack of interesting programming on the available channels, and I think this will be the eventual future of TV, so choose exactly what you want to see when you want to see it.
I’m feeling better but am two weeks behind on life, so this issue is a bit late as well. But I’m hoping to catch up soon! As for B5, I’ve watched several episodes here and there. It’s something that in theory I would have liked but for some reason, I just can’t get into it. I didn’t like the first captain and liked Bruce Boxleitner so much better. But I think by that time, I was just done with it. I think I don’t like that they’re on a stationary location too. Same reason why I didn’t care much for “Star Trek: Deep Space Nine.” It just tends to become too much of soap opera for my taste when they’re always in the same place.

I believe Dante Basco is coming to our area here, a guest of one of the anime conventions northwest of Toronto. I am not planning to go, but looks like he is fairly popular now, and is taking full advantage of the convention circuit.

The Edwardian World’s Fair and the Mad Hatter Ball both sound like they were fabulous affairs to be at. There may be something interesting coming up in our area … all I know is what I found out literally minutes ago as I type … Abney Park somewhere in the Niagara Falls area, coming up in mid-September. More as I discover it.

Abney Park is one of those bands that I can see again and again. They’re very entertaining not only sonically but visually as well.

There are rarely a lot of movies I look forward to at the beginning of the year. One that we plan to see that isn’t on your list is a comedy called “The Grand Budapest Hotel.” It has a huge cast, which includes Ralph Fiennes, Jude Law and Bill Murray, and it could be the very first Steampunk comedy. We’re going to take a risk, and go and see it; it comes out March 7.

I saw that on IMBD but I didn’t know it was going to be Steampunk so I didn’t even look into it. I’ll have to check it out now.

Jason Burnett has discovered one reason why I’ve been responding to this zine since the first issue … you discover how fandom operates in other cities, and you can borrow some ideas as inspiration to start new activities where you are.

That is indeed true. And that’s why I love reading your LOCs to us because I get to see what it’s like in your area.

My loc … we certainly survived our ice storm, but now the American South is discovering them first-hand, and I don’t think they’ve ever had that before. Climate change exists! We are still planning the idea of going to both sides of Niagara Falls to take some photos of the Tesla monuments. We have indeed taken a table at the craft show referred to at The Metropolis Factory … the Artisans of the Metropolis bazaar takes place on February 22, and we will be selling out Steampunk wares. Jobwise, all the prospects fell through, but suddenly, I have some new ones. Hope must spring eternal; if not, that way lies depression.

I can’t even imagine how you folks live through ice storms. Growing up in a country with no snow, it sounds very scary to me. It is indeed mystifying how climates have changed so drastically this past winter. In our neck of the woods, we have very little rain and we are now in a drought.

Please do let us know about your trip to Niagara Falls. I’d love to see photos of the Tesla monuments.

That’s good to hear that you’re keeping your hopes up. And I hope you get a job soon.

When Star Wars was still in the production stages, I think 20th Century Fox was getting the word out everywhere. Fisher, Ford and Hamill were shuttled up to Toronto for an autograph session at Bakka Books, the big SF bookstore on Queen St W. Sounds like Toronto was just one of many stops on their promotional tour. I’ll bet they thought the whole thing was a pain the butt, but did it ever pay dividends.

I wasn’t here in the U.S. then so this is the first I’ve heard that the actors did a promo tour. That’s great that 20th Century Fox marketed the movie well, but it seems like, word of mouth also was a big reason for the success of the movie.

For issue 150, you want to hear what this zine has meant to me, even if I live about as far away from you as possible and still stay on the continent. SF/SF shows me that as I might look at fandom around me, and think that it is changing or disintegrating, and my sense of community might be suffering, it is healthy in other places. The Bay area has clubs, conventions and events, more of all of those than other places, and a fannish community that blessed needs a way to keep track of it all, a way to get all pertinent information to become as involved as you wish to be, and something that all in the community can enjoy. It caters to all fandoms, and will not put one fandom down as inferior to others. It shows that the more information is provided and spread about, and the more informed the members of the community are, the stronger that community is. As far as I can tell, SF/SF is the backbone of that strong community, and I suspect that the community has come to rely upon it to stay informed and connected. This goes with the remark I made about Jason Burnett’s loc above. This zine has confirmed my own opinions about community, that the more informed it is, the stronger it is … I produce a convention list for Toronto fandom, and it goes with Yvonne’s Pubnites and Other Events e-newsletter. Most people will not come to our pubnights, but they stay with the e-list to get the convention information. I would like to see you talk to Chris Garcia and see if he had a similar mission statement in mind when he started this zine.

Jack Avery actually started the zine and Chris Garcia has summarized the history of SF/SF in his LOC above. But yes, I do believe, Jack did have those goals in mind when he started the zine.

All done for the moment. Thanks for this issue, and I think 150 will be spectacular. Looking forward to it!
Return to the Forbidden Planet Review

By Jack Avery
Editor Emeritus

Return to the Forbidden Planet isn’t so much a stage sequel to the classic 1950s science fiction movie, as a mash-up between Forbidden Planet and all of Shakespeare’s works used as an excuse to sing some classic rock and roll tunes.

A hit when it first played in London nearly a quarter of a decade ago, the jukebox musical received a surprisingly sprightly revival last month in Novato by The Curtain Theatre and Marin Onstage in Novato with a rollerblading Ariel/Robbie the Robot and a standout cast.

The fun stated even before the play began with costumed cast members in character dispensing space-themed treats to the audience in the form of cups of Tang and Mars Bars.

Once the play was underway, I was particularly impressed by the vocal ability of the main cast.

Phillip Percy Williams is the sort of talent that is rarely seen in small regional theater productions. As Captain Tempest his powerful stage presence and his deep, rich vocals were ideal in the lead role. Williams has extensive experience as a jazz vocalist and as a musical actor and it showed.

Amy Lizardo was almost as dominating with her soulful voice as Science Officer Gloria. She was a good foil to both Captain Tempest and Prospero with a very strong performance. Unfortunately, the script called for her character to be absent for the middle of the play, which limited how much we heard her sing.
Amanda Morando, Musical Director as well as key role Miranda, and Phillip Swanson as the Bosun, both did well with their solos with solid vocal performances. Producer and Choreographer Steve Beecroft as Cookie did a fine job on some of the do-wop numbers, but wasn’t as much of a standout as some of the others. Paul Abbott certainly had the gravitas to play Prospero, but his vocals seem to be a bit hoarse and he just couldn’t belt out the rock and roll with the same power as some of the other performers.

There were quite a few other cast members, but the script didn’t give them much to do. They served mostly as backup singers and dancers.

I was quite pleasantly surprised that the play was kept “pure” and few attempts were made to modernize it or make too many pop culture references. They could have made this into a Star Trek in-joke quite easily but they avoided that except in a few one-off jokes centered on the auxiliary cast members.

Mark Clark as Chief Medical Officer Bonz got in an “I’m a doctor, not a ...” joke. Shari Clover as Communications Officer Siri got in a couple of iPhone jokes. Will Lamers as Security Officer “Warf” was the joke as he was a Klingon in a kilt.

The biggest Star Trek reference was in the design of Melissa Claire’s Ariel costume, which was clearly based on the Borg. As well as playing the character that serves as roller-skating analog to both Ariel from “The Tempest” and Robby the Robot from “Forbidden Planet,” she was the costume designer.

As for the play itself, it was fun, but there just isn’t much to it. The play serves as an excuse for the main cast to break into familiar songs from the dawn of rock and roll through the 1960s. The science officer is named Gloria, for example, just so that the cast can break into a rousing rendition of the song of the same name. When the planet their on starts to break up, they sing “We Gotta Get Out Of This Place”.

The text of the play borrows liberally from the works of Shakespeare, with lines coming from many different plays.

Despite the title, the play is not a sequel so much as a watered-down distillation of the plot points of the originals. If you’ve seen “Forbidden Planet” and are familiar with “The Tempest” there won’t be any surprises in the plot. A survey ship commanded by Captain Tempest encounters a meteor storm as the cast sings “Great Balls of Fire.” The science officer abandons ship while the rest of the crew manage to land on a nearby planet and meet Prospero, who has been marooned with his daughter Miranda by his ex-wife.

Prospero has built a robot, Ariel, who is capable of amazing feats. Prospero offers to have Ariel fix the crew’s damaged craft and search for the missing science officer.

Meanwhile a love triangle has sprung up between Captain Tempest, Miranda and Cookie. The usual romantic complications ensue. While fixing the ship, Ariel reveals that Prospero has been working on a formula called The X Factor (cue a joke about the recent TV series) that can expand the mind.
Ariel locates the missing science officer, but she is being pursued by a monster that then attacks the ship. While Ariel is able to fend off the monster, it is revealed that the science officer is Prospero’s ex-wife and she is placed under arrest for her crimes.

There are the usual romantic complications, plots between scheming crew members, Prospero getting mad that the Captain is getting romantically involved with his daughter, etc. It’s revealed that the monster is just Prospero’s id and eventually all is straightened out in time for the final song and dance numbers.

If you enjoy juke box musicals with a science fiction theme, “Return to the Forbidden Planet” is a good choice. The play itself is nothing deep or new, but it’s entertaining enough. The real attraction is in the quality of the musical performances and the Novato production succeeded on the strength of the lead actor’s fantastic vocals.
A Year Without Cons

By Thad Gann
 Contributing Writer

After a couple decades of spending holiday weekends and planning vacations around science fiction conventions, I decided to skip everything for 2013. It started with the difficulties of dealing with Comic-Con International and WonderCon moving permanently to Southern California. So I decided a break was in order. No WorldCon, BayCon, WesterCon, LosCon, Clockwork Alchemy, nor any of the myriad of other conventions we are fortunate enough to have access to. It was tough, and very tempting at times, but I was able to make it through the entire year. So with this much time on my hands how did I fill my days?

Burning Man: This tribal event takes place late summer every year North East of Reno Nevada. It is at various points an exercise in survival, a multi-day party and a costume event. It also has a huge number of sci-fi fans. The kind of fans that build spaceships and airships and fantastical assortment of buildings and conveyances. It was quite an interesting week. Ask me and I’ll tell you some time.

Movies: 2013 was a great year for science fiction. Some of the best (and worst) movies in years came out last year, and I was privileged enough to see many with fellow fans. From the dystopia of “Elysium” and “World War Z” to the comic book joy of “Iron Man 3” and “Thor: The Dark World,” there was one science fiction movie playing in theaters almost every week of the year. And many movies made both Year’s Best and Year’s Worst list, which alone is pretty impressive.

Events: We are lucky in the Bay Area to be close to so many wonderful events. The Northern California Renaissance Faire is just south of San Jose. Northern California Pirate Festival is just North of the Carquinez Strait Bridge. The Dickens Fair is at the Cow Palace. These multi-day events are not Science Fiction related but do appeal to the same sense of fantasy and adventure we enjoy. They are costume events in the loosest interpretation of the term and allow spectacles for all groups and ages. I missed the Pirate Festival last year (argh!!) because of a family event out of state, but spent many a fine hour at other festivals. Another amazing event in San Francisco is the Edwardian Ball, celebrating the life and times of Edward Gorey. In 2014, the Edwardian World’s Faire and Ball was held last January 17-18 at the Regency Ballroom. Three full floors of activities crammed the ball this year. From the Vendor Bazaar on the lower floor to the Mystic Midway on the Upper Floor, every nook and cranny was filled with wonders. One of my great joys was watching Unwoman perform at the Upper Floor stage.

Which brings me to my last entry in this narrative. Family and Friends. During this last year I have been especially blessed to show dear friends and members of my family a glimpse into the worlds I explore on a regular basis. I was an impromptu tour guide to several first time attendees at Dickens Fair, showed a friend around the Renaissance Fair last fall, attended several costume and impromptu gatherings in the City. I also spent many hours discussing costumes and spent many an hour photographing costumes of all types. The camaraderie of friends is our best and best kept secret. While we all have different pursuits, we maintain interwoven threads of common interests that form great bonds of friendships.

Would I skip another year of sci-fi conventions? Perhaps. Give me a couple more decades and we can talk about it.
Further Confusion (FurCon) was held on January 16-20, 2014, at the recently renovated San Jose McEnery Convention Center in downtown San Jose. It was rather relaxed and composed compared to a lot of the events that I attend.

The convention felt more compact and contained, especially with FurCon sharing space with a volleyball tournament in the main building and a hemp convention also happening at the South Hall. The isolated area made it feel less intrusive to the other functions and there was a better atmosphere. There was a large curtain that separated the areas and you could not have to pass through the sports tourney to get to FurCon.

The theme this year was “Further Confusion vs. The World,” a reference to the comic book series and movie “Scott Pilgrim vs. The World.” Since the inspiration was based on video games, there was a theme for retro video games and 1980s fashion. The program book featured artwork mashups with characters from “Metroid,” “Super Mario Brothers,” “Street Fighter II” and others as anthropomorphic versions and a short story about gaming. The badges featured this theme as well and the pocket guide cover art was based on “Scott Pilgrim.” There was a display of different gaming systems set up for people to play games including old Nintendo Entertainment System games “Kung-Fu” and the 1989 “Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles” and a version of “Scott Pilgrim vs. The World: The Game.” The charity for 2014 was the Digital Game Museum located in Santa Clara, Calif., which preserves and presents the history of digital video gaming.

There were a few costumes that worked the theme in. There was a dog with a “Guitar Hero” guitar, a Ramona Flowers from “Scott Pilgrim,” a “Minecraft” costume, a Master Chief from “Halo,” a couple of “Pokémon” characters, and some 1980s fashions. There were a few other interesting outfits as well including a Minion from the “Despicable Me” movies, a giant slice of pizza, a GIR in his green dog disguise from “Invader Zim,” a velociraptor version of Dr. Alan Grant from “Jurassic Park” and a TARDIS dress and anthropomorphic versions of fantasy characters.

The big draw for the day I went was the Fursuit Parade. The event was something that I had wanted to partake in for a while since I had first seen it. I decided to wear my Tronified Sorcerer’s Apprentice Mickey Mouse outfit for the parade. The participants began to gather outside the main room. People hung out and chatted, took photos, admired the costumes of each other and broke out into a spontaneous game of balloon volleyball while trying to keep the balloons aloft with their noises. The congregation was then let in to line up. There was a director who grouped all of the animals together and arranged them in some semblance of order and told jokes to keep everyone entertained. During that time, I found another costumer who was wearing a Minnie Mouse outfit. We hung out and gathered together during the parade.

During the congressional itself, you could see all of the people lined up along the route, which wound around the main floor of the hall, through the dealer room and back into the main event room. There were lots of people taking pictures as well as people making jokes about copyright issues with Mickey Mouse. After the parade was over, everyone gathered together for a photo in the room taken from a scissor lift. The final count of participants in the parade was 634 and everyone who was in the parade received a tag with a number on it (similar to tags when livestock is sold) that was done as the game “Pong.”
People and fursuiters were able to relax in a nice area near the main hall rooms with nice lounge chairs. There was also a professional photographer in the lounge area where you could have your photo taken for free.

After the main programming and dealer room closure, there was a natural break point before the evening entertainments such as the masquerade, dance and video game tournament began. It was a good time to get food with plenty of dining options downtown within walking distance. While walking to the restaurant I ate at (Johnny Rocket’s), I had a chance to admire plenty of people walking around in costume or hanging out outside of the lobby of the adjoining hotel. I also had the chance to go to Single Barrel for a drink with some friends. The only drawback to being outside of the convention was the heavy smell of cannabis in the air from HempCon.

Unfortunately, the party rooms were scarce this year. Only the Black Hole had a theme this year and the Communist Party was completely missing. The rest were more hangouts or rave style parties. Plenty of people were out on the patio having a good time.

FurCon 2014 was a good time. I am looking forward to next year with even more costuming and fun.
Rediscovering Creation’s Star Trek Conventions

By Jean Martin
Editor-in-Chief

My first experiences with science fiction conventions were in the early to mid-1990s. If I remember correctly, they were all organized by Creation Entertainment. There was one I attended at the San Mateo Event Center for the 25th anniversary of “Star Trek” in 1991. I remember it was in one of the biggest halls and there were a lot of fans but I didn’t know anyone. William Shatner and Leonard Nimoy’s plane was delayed and so we waited for a long time for them to arrive. But it was worth the wait as they were hilarious together.

Then I went to two more. One was with Patrick Stewart (reciting lines from Shakespeare) and Marina Sirtis at the San Jose Center for the Performing Arts. The other was at the San Francisco Masonic Auditorium with Nana Visitor, Kate Mulgrew and Robert Duncan McNeill. Again, I didn’t know anyone at either of these and I also didn’t even line up for autographs or buy any memorabilia.

So I didn’t go to any Creation conventions for another 15 plus years. I’d seen most of the actors I’d wanted to see and there wasn’t anything else that drew me to go. Also, it seemed like I didn’t hear about these conventions again and I also started going to fan-run conventions in 2004, which I preferred because there was a sense of community and I got to make friends, party, costume, write, take photos and publish an e-zine.
However, after going to Las Vegas a few times to see the Star Trek Experience and after hearing about Creation Star Trek conventions in the Bay Area again, I got excited about rekindling my love of “Star Trek” by going to a convention.

The past few years they have been in San Francisco and on dates I couldn’t make it. I don’t recall exactly when Creation started doing this in Burlingame, near where I live, but last November, I took advantage of this proximity and made an effort to go.

The convention was for three days from November 8-10, but Chris and I only went on the last day, which was a Sunday. Unfortunately, that meant that we missed the Costume Contest on Friday night, but that was for Gold members only. The Gold weekend package is a bit pricey. There is a less expensive Silver option, and an economical general admission weekend package. Single-day general admission tickets were also available.

We also didn’t get to see William Shatner and Lee Meriwether who appeared on Saturday. I don’t know if it was done intentionally, but it seemed like the programming for Saturday focused on Original Series guests. I would like to see William Shatner again, and hopefully we’ll come back for the convention this year. I would also like to get his autograph and maybe even a photo with him.

Sunday was for the spinoffs. We had some issues getting there early so we totally missed Jeri Ryan (7 of 9 from “Voyager”). I would have liked to see her as I thought her character was great and “Voyager” is my third favorite after a tie between the Original Series and “The Next Generation.” Speaking of Next Gen, we were able to attend the panel with Jonathan Frakes (Commander Riker), Marina Sirtis (Counselor Troi) and Gates McFadden (Dr. Crusher). I didn’t recognize Frakes as he now has a beard. Sirtis and McFadden still looked the same... beautiful. They were very entertaining together as they all had different personalities. Frakes made a joke about a YouTube video of the Riker Maneuver where he climbs over chairs to sit down as he’s so tall. Sirtis said that she loves her fans because they know to give her dark chocolate. McFadden mentioned that the funniest question that was asked of her by a fan was from someone who thought that the characters and the ship are real. Anyway, the whole time all three were hilarious just interacting with each other and with the fans asking questions.

Later on, we watched Robert Beltran being interviewed onstage. His panel was a bit more serious and he talked about his career and acting in general. He is quite the gentleman.

In between the panels, Chris and I checked out the vendor areas, which consisted of the open area in front of the main ballroom where the panels were held and a smaller ballroom to the side. Our first stop was to say hello to Spring and Dave who had a booth called Springtime Creations for Spring’s sci-fi and fantasy jewelry. Then we explored both areas, which had a lot of great memorabilia such as photos, toys, art, posters, t-shirts, DVDs, CDs, etc. And not just of the “Star Trek” universe but other movies and TV shows as well.

I was good and only bought one t-shirt that was pink and said Space Girls on it with several female characters spelling out the words. There were several autographed plaques I was interested in but they were expensive and I’m trying to be more frugal and practical these days. I used to buy lots of memorabilia and they wind up just gathering dust, taking up storage space or being sold on eBay for much less than I paid for.

In the main vendor room I also got to meet Max Grodenchik and Aron Eisenberg (Rom and Nog, respectively, from “Deep Space Nine”) as well as Michael Aron who made a very memorable turn as Jack London in one of my favorite “Next Generation” episodes, the two-parter “Time’s Arrow.” This story was set in San Francisco and I found out that Aron lives in the Bay Area.

It was actually ironic that this convention was held at the same hotel a weekend after Convolution, which I’m also covering in this issue. So it was a bit of a déjà vu to be roaming the same halls, going to the same ballrooms and eating at the same restaurants. We even saw some of the same friends but this time they were in “Star Trek” scifi costumes instead of fantasy costumes.

I think that’s why I enjoyed the convention very much. Seeing the actors was great but seeing friends and people in costumes really added to the fun. Also, attendance was very good (probably because the reboot movies have brought the franchise back into the mainstream) and there were people of all ages. It was truly wonderful to see the younger generation appreciating the values that make “Star Trek” special. That of the enduring hope that mankind will evolve for the better and that we will continue to advance and explore space in the future. “Star Trek” also shows that science and technology are important as are interpersonal relations and human goodness and decency.
There were a lot of people in costumes, and with Chris and I being in costumes ourselves, we were able to connect with people because we have a common interest. Taking photos of people in costume also helped us meet new people. Some also wanted to take photos of us or with us.

The autograph lines were right in the open area and it didn’t seem like the lines were very long. I wasn’t interested in autographs that time, though, as I already had one from Marina Sirtis from a while back and she’s the only one I would have been willing to pay extra for an autograph. Autographs for different actors are an extra fee depending on whether you buy a package or if it’s included in the package you purchase. Photos with the actors are always an additional charge.

Anyway, it was a fun-filled day and it wonderful to be back in the “Star Trek” fold. I also had a fabulous time being with fellow fans as they were warm and welcoming. I am definitely planning on going to more of these in the future. Hopefully, I’ll even make it to the big one in Las Vegas someday.
Convolution had a great start in 2012 and so I was looking forward to its second year. The convention was held last November 1-3, 2013, and was again at the Hyatt Regency SFO in Burlingame, Calif. Not only is the Hyatt SFO a beautiful hotel, it’s also very close to where I live, and so it’s convenient and I don’t have to stay at the hotel (saves money!).

The theme in 2013 was the Gates of Horn and Ivory: The Realms of Dream. The phrase comes from Virgil’s “The Aeneid,” one of my favorite stories of all time. The convention website correlates it with the fact that: “Authors of Science Fiction and Fantasy use our dreams of magical creatures, faraway lands, space travel and so much more to create whole new universes, which then turn around and feed the imaginations of their readers, pulling them into those worlds.”

The guests of honor for the convention expound on the theme. These included Brian (artist, author, conceptual designer) and Wendy (doll maker, sculptor and puppet builder) Froud as well as Wendy and Richard Pini (creative team behind Elfquest, authors, illustrators and editors).

I was able to attend one of the panels that Brian and Wendy Froud did along with their son Toby, who was the little baby of the same name in Jim Henson’s movie “Labyrinth.” Brian was the conceptual designer for “Labyrinth” and “Dark Crystal,” both of which were Jim Henson’s movies. Wendy created the Gelflings in “Dark Crystal” and Yoda in the “Star Wars” movies. I was able to meet all three as well as Toby’s son Sebastian who was dressed in the same costume that Toby wore in the movie.

I’d previously met Wendy and Richard Pini both unfortunately didn’t get to see them at the con at all. There was just so much to do!

Chris and I were both panelists and had three panels each. The only one we had in common was the Posing for the Camera: A Guide for both Costumers and Photographers moderated by our friend Jade Falcon. Other panelists for that one included another friend, Jean Batt (DJ Neshamah), and another guest of honor, writer and photographer Richard Kadrey.

My other panels were Editing Your Own Work (moderated by publisher and author Jennifer Brozek) and Mythology: Basis for Modern Fantasy (moderated by faerie shaman/artist Surya O’Shea). Chris was in a 50 Years of Doctor Who panel moderated by our friend Ryan Gallioto.

Other than panels, I was able to check out the dealer room, which had wonderful handmade items created by talented artists, crafters, jewelers and costume makers. There was a gaming room as well, which I just took a peek into because it was located in a former restaurant at the hotel, which used to be a favorite of my family’s when we first moved into the area.

There were also parties, the best of which was the Klingon Black Hole.* The layout of suites at the hotel really lends itself well to parties and the Klingons really do a great setup with backdrops and a real bar.

The highlight of the convention for me was The Goblin King’s Masked Ball on Saturday evening. Inspired by “Labyrinth,” and funded by a successful Kickstarter campaign, the ball was amazing. It was like stepping into another world with everyone in colorful and elaborate costumes. When I looked around at one point, seeing everyone in masks, it truly was a surreal experience.

The ball had great entertainment as well. Cellist and singer Unwoman did a set, three members of Temple of Poi individually wowed the crowd with their fire dancing (using non-fire equipment like flags and globes) and Vespertine Circus had a section of the ballroom were they did aerials and other acrobatic acts.

The headliners were Tricky Pixie, which I enjoyed very much, and it seemed like the crowd did too as the dance floor was packed the entire time. The band, who style themselves as Gypsy Celtic Folk Rock for Naughty Punk Faeries played several high-energy numbers and had very catchy tunes.

After the band, DJ Neshamah played goth and industrial dance music. I always enjoy the songs that she plays. They’re very danceable.

So Convolution was a lot of fun and it looks like they’re getting better each year. I can’t wait to see what they come up with this year.

ADRIFT ON THE TANAKA SEA

Just a routine mapping mission over Hell, when suddenly…Alarms and confusion. Bucking and shaking from explosions, spinning helplessly out of control we tumble down towards the crimson waves. The roar of the ship’s disintegration drowns out even our own screams… And then, a shower of light…and silence…

Adrift on the Tanaka Sea, scarlet clouds swirl in a vomit colored sky. Rain, the color and taste of blood, drips onto our parched mouths from the roiling chaos above. Close lipped, we refuse the toxic kisses of the sky, turning our faces away from the copper taste of poison and the fires of the dueling suns that burns through the churning clouds. Now, drifting aimlessly on a sea of hopelessness, we can no longer even imagine the soft breezes of our home planet.

There is no place to escape this madness. Everywhere we look the terrible truth of our desperate situation stares back at us, stark in the harsh light of the endless day. Visions of horrors leap upon us from the cancerous clouds and sky. Panic defeats reason and we shrink away from the nightmare that assaults our senses.

Someone in the raft is sobbing, mind blown by the images of naked fear that sears our burning eyes. Most of us are beyond terror, or pain, now, exhausted from battling the constant madness that hangs in the sky above the Tanaka Sea. Our will to resist is gone, burned out of us by the double suns. The turquoise sky of Terra is but a vague memory, too surreal to be true. We wish only to rest our eyes one last time, on a single yellow sun and the white clouds of Earth, but the maelstrom above us mocks our dreams of peace, and day by day we slip closer to the edge of oblivion.

Here, adrift on the Tanaka Sea, we can only wait for death’s sure hand to take us, freeing our lost souls to fly in the skies above the cool blue seas of home.

MADONNA OF THE STARS

Madonna of the stars, your child, wrapped in silver swaddling clothes, whirs, clicks and calls for his heavenly father.

The father stands behind the one way glass, his glasses shining, jotting down cosmic notes, glaring at his creations, 21st Century Virgin and Child.

Technology and Faith war for control of man. Who, or what is this new Messiah, Man, or Metal Prophet?
THE ELECTRIC UNIVERSE

Lightning bolts arc through the heavens, generated by the forces of the electric universe. Solar flares shoot off of the surface of the sun, like sparks from Vulcan’s hammer and anvil. The Venus Transit, foretold in ancient scrolls, brings the cycle around again to the beginning of the end. Signs and portents, passed on through time, but scorned, now prove their truth as the warnings come to pass. The concepts of the planets moving like cosmic clockwork, through an ordered solar system in an average galaxy, are dying with each new revelation come to light. The planets tumble through space, like falling bodies.

Sol’s dark companion is spinning back into the embrace of her long lost brother, bringing her worlds and moons, and all of the cosmic crap she carries along through space. Long forgotten, she was once known as the Sun’s Dark Sister. The powers that be kept it under wraps as long as possible, ridiculing the warnings and suppressing the evidence. Now, by the light of the full moon, the whole world can see the meteors remaking Luna’s surface, en route to Earth. The night sky turns red with the first stream of bolides. They come like a hail storm, a fall of fire and stone, tearing holes in the clouds, like some celestial shotgun. Explosions light up the landscape and the ground shakes, knocking the stunned onlookers to their knees. The dark red star pulses among the fading stars, and the black and blue worlds race across her face. Is this the twelfth planet of the ancient myths? Or is it the planet on the other side of the world? From an angle of thirty-three and a third cosmic degrees, it’s coming at us like an interstellar sucker punch aimed at the unprotected underbelly of our home. The Suits said they never saw it coming until it was too late, but now they’re hiding in their bunkers, watching it on TV. You and I watch the world fall apart around us, while we waltz in The Martian Lounge to the music that comes from the depths of our hearts. If only this song could have been heard by everyone, we might not have fallen without a fight.

The wings of The Phoenix unfold in the night, announcing the long awaited return to its nest. Each second The Phoenix draws closer, bringing the fire that will cleanse the earth, completing its cycle of rebirth. Millions of people are on their knees, praying to the ancient gods and goddesses that ruled the sky. The vision I had, on the night Luna, Venus, and Jupiter formed the celestial bow and arrow, has come true. Here we are, hand in hand at the end of the old world. We know the reasons why the earth and sky are burning. The Seven Deadly Sins take their seats at the feast for Faust, gorging themselves on the banquet Man has set for himself. This is the way the world goes out, on its hands and knees, bowed and broken by Jupiter’s mighty lightning bolts. The sky is falling, the sea is rising, and now the final shock is rippling through the world on a tidal wave of tears. Through a rent in the clouds I see what’s left of the moon. The ravaged orb, ringed in a silver cloud, still shines, the last link to the dream of a world of beauty and love. I remember my vision and the sweet music that played, and hear again, Luna’s lullaby for a world of woe.

THE MAN FROM PLANET X

Out on the lonely moor
the darkness rivals that of deep space.
The fog is felt more than seen, thick and fluid, enfolding me in its tenuous embrace. No sooner does it have me, but it lets me go and I wander into the next swirling mass of nothingness. Suddenly, the globe of light appears again, pulsing blue and green in the distance. I can hear the low-pitched hum and feel the steady rhythmic throb of its machinery as I move closer and closer on trembling legs. I walk even slower, more carefully, now that I have tracked the strange being to its ship. My walking stick is my only defense against the danger of the stranger from beyond the stars. I hold onto it like a sword, ignoring the uneven ground and tufts of foliage and grass I traverse. The craft is not as large as I had imagined, but even more beautiful, with its glowing lights. I search around the circumference for a door, or window, and find a circle of blue crystal on the side. I move closer, pressing my face against it, seeking the mystery that lies inside. A blank expressionless face looks back at me and someone screams (that must be me, I realize.) I’m suddenly running full speed, bad leg and all, crashing through the fog and darkness, tripping and stumbling over the moor. I don’t stop until I run face first into the gate and end up on my back, looking up at the stars. The glowing craft is hightailing it back into outer space. I wonder who scared the other one more, me, or the Man from Planet X?
